Deb Boudra

Deb, a former art teacher in the county, has enjoyed experimenting in oils and watercolor, Yupo, oil pastels, lithography and various forms of printmaking. She revels in the loss of sensations and time during the creative process. While much of her work celebrates the natural world up close and in landscapes, she is deeply moved by human interaction as well, driving her to explore portraits.

Giclée Prints

Giclée prints are quality copies, professionally scanned and printed with a wider range of archival inks. (Inks that are fade resistant and acid free) They can be printed on canvas, canvas paper or watercolor paper in increasing or decreasing sizes as well as the original size. If the art has been scanned, you can ask the artist to give you a quote for a custom size to suit your space.

Intaglio Etching

Intaglio etching is a printmaking process. Various techniques are used to make pits and grooves in a zinc plate (such as acid biting, aquatint and sugar lift) The image can then be hand inked in one color, selectively inked in more colors , or a 3 plate color process can be used. In the three plate process, the same image is transferred to 3 zinc plates. First, the yellow plate is engraved with just that which is intended to be yellow or to mix yellow with subsequent layers. The next plate is red. Again, it is engraved with just the parts of the image that are to be red, or mixed with the other two layers. The final plate is blue, etched only as above. A relatively full range of colors can be achieved. Once each plate is inked up, registration marks are placed on the press and the plates are printed, one layer on top of the other. Yes, it is tricky to keep them lined up! To complete the edition, each plate is cleaned and re-inked before running through the press. SO there are more original images to be had of any etching. If you are purchasing an etching, ask the artist if there are variations and ask to choose the print that appeals most to you.

An example of the three plate process is the Waterlily etching. Selective inking was used on the Porcelain Box. A poupée means paper was glued on to the print to add a pop of color. Echinacea is an example of a poupée. Some versions of Celestial Dancers are also examples of paper added for texture.
